The Democrats have no Moses this year, and Barnum is wanting his seven more miles.

It is fun to be a Republican this year; and handsome business trying to elect Hancock and Shylcock.

The year of 1880 is a year of jubilee to the Republicans, and the Democrats are looking on with fear and trembling.

The State horticultural society will hold a regular meeting at Madison on Wednesday, in the agricultural rooms at the capitol.

If you want to know how the campaign is going, look squarely in the face of a Democrat. As a political barometer it indicates that the Democrats are going to get left badly.

When a Republican speaker says a thing on the stump, he means what he says, and tests his position by facts; when a Democrat undertakes to say anything he apologizes, and don't know what he does mean.

There is nothing that helps along the Republican campaign so much as Democratic speeches in defense of the Solid South and the principles of Lee and Jackson. The Democrats are building better than they know.

The opening of English's barrel in Indiana does not seem to have revived the hopes of the Democrats very much in that State. The Democratic "working-man's friend," has completed his robbery, and the people won't forget it.

Four years ago the Democratic National platform said the Republican resumption act was "a hindrance to resumption and ought to be repealed," and now the Democrats say the Republicans had nothing to do in bringing about resumption.

Colonel Robert G. Ingersoll is doing some excellent campaign work in Maine. At Lake Umbagog on Friday last he had an audience of 8,000, and the rounds of applause given by the vast concourse, attested their appreciation of the orator and the enthusiasm which prevails among the Republicans of Maine.

To-day Arkansas will hold its State election, and under the Democratic system of counting will give a big majority for that party. Under no circumstances will the Republicans be permitted to have a free ballot and a fair count. If it were otherwise, the Democrats know full well that they could gain no victory.

A Washington dispatch says that Senator Carpenter's health is so poor that his physicians have advised him not to leave Washington for the present. For some time he has been troubled with Bright's disease of the kidneys, and in a most aggravated form. His condition may not be considered critical, but his friends, however, express a good deal of anxiety in regard to him.

General McClellan made a little speech at Nevis, New Hampshire, last week, before an assembly of veterans, in which he charged the children of the soldiers to guard the country's honor as valiantly as their fathers had done. That is just what the Republican party is teaching the rising generation, and in this it has the opposition of the Democratic party North and South.

The Republican Congressional convention in the 6th district will be held at Oshkosh, on Tuesday, the 14th instant. It is generally conceded the State Treasurer Gnether, will accept the nomination. Undoubtedly he is one of the strongest men in the district, and should he run, will retire Gabe Bonek to private life. The district is properly Republican, and it is a misfortune that it should be represented by a man like Bonek.

A dispatch from Sparta to the Chicago Tribune gives the information that the Democrats of the 7th Congressional district have been trying to induce Senator William T. Price, of Black River Falls, to run as an independent candidate against Judge Humphrey, the present Congressman from that district. It will be remembered that Price was a candidate before the Republican convention a short time since. He has been a candidate for Congress for the past twenty years, and has always been left. When he was defeated the last time, he felt sore and was disappointed. He was almost mad enough to turn Democrat. But he didn't, and the efforts to induce him to accept a nomination from the hands of the Democrats, have not been successful. Price is an ambitious, erratic man, terribly malignant at times, powerfully self-willed, but with all that he is hardly mean enough to bolt the Republican nomination because he was defeated.

WHAT BUSINESS MEN WANT.
When Democratic managers write platforms and make nominations they go on the principle that people are fools. Here is where they make a blunder. It does not require a very keen intellect to penetrate into the motives of the Democratic party in nominating a Union general for President and a Shylcock for Vice President. It does not require a large brain nor a far-reaching mind to divine the purpose of the Democratic party in adopting one thing for one part of the country and another thing for another part of the country. When the Democrats met in Cincinnati, they solemnly resolved for a tariff for revenue only, and heretofore the National Democratic platform have advocated free trade. But the Democrats of Pennsylvania, for fear of losing votes, have adopted the Republican system of home protection, which is entirely opposed to the spirit of Democracy. The New Jersey Democrat, fearing that the State could not be carried under the National Democratic platform regarding protection to home industries, likewise stole the Republican principle of giving the largest protection possible to our manufacturing interests, and when the Democratic State convention met last week, it strangely resolved that "the platform adopted by the National Democratic convention at Cincinnati, meets our hearty approval," and in the next breath resolved that the Democratic party of New Jersey is in favor of such a tariff "as will best protect our home industries."

This bewildering condition of things regarding the Democratic policy, is opening the eyes of practical business men in every part of the country. They are tired of giving a party support which is all things to all men and all interests. They want no bumbling and grotesque lies in politics this year. They want a party which will believe a thing in January and stick to it in July. They want a party which has some settled and well defined principle, and they want these principles in accord with the loyal sentiment and the best interests of all classes in this country. There is a general awakening on this subject all over the North among business men; and this accounts for the hundreds who have voted the Democratic ticket heretofore, now supporting the Republican ticket. Merchants, manufacturers, mechanics and laboring men, are taking a deeper interest in politics now than ever before, and their keen appreciation of their own interests, and those of the country, leads them to give the Republican party their hearty support.

There is an excellent degree of prosperity in the land, and whatever of benefits the country now enjoys, it enjoys them by the grace of the Republican party. When the Democrats were trying to defeat the resumption act, when they were endeavoring to wipe out our present system of currency and to flood the country with an irredeemable paper money, the Republican party stood unflinchingly by resumption, by honest money, and by the faith of the Nation, and in consequence of this the era of prosperity came. The present attempt of the Democratic party to make a change, fills the minds of business men with dread, and they will not support a party whose plain purpose and direct aim is to change the business condition of the country by putting the government with all the industrial interests of the Nation in the hands of the South.

Men who have an eye to business, men who are practical in dealing in business affairs, are unwilling to trust the Democratic party in 1880. They do not want to throw away prosperity. They do not want the public confidence shaken by the success of the Democratic party. They don't want the South to dictate to the North, and they don't want the solemn pledges of the government repudiated by the Democratic-Confederate party.

MR. LAWRENCE BARRETT.
Not since the days of Edwin Forrest has so distinguished a tragedian visited Janesville as Mr. Lawrence Barrett. He comes to us full of honors, having in the last seven or eight years won a proud eminence among the great tragedians of the day. When he came here seven years ago last May and gave us Hamlet, his fame had not preceded him. He was then one of the masters of the American stage, and was just gaining a reputation and a success that his ability and industry merited. But Janesville was not prepared to do honor to Lawrence Barrett, and he played two of his grandest characters to small audiences. But things have changed since then, and Janesville will give him a more kindly and earnest reception than it has given to any actor since the night Joseph Jefferson gave Rip Van Winkle seven years since.

That Mr. Barrett should be thus received is a credit to the intelligence of Janesville, and it is an honor to the city that he has consented to play here again. There is no tragedian now living who deserves to be more honored than he. Of the tragedians, the triumvirate of the American stage is composed of Edwin Booth, John McCullough, and Lawrence Barrett, and the latter cannot be counted second to the two first named. He is a careful student, a ripe scholar, and an accomplished actor; and by the dint of perseverance and a display of excellent judgment, soon struck the keynote of popular appreciation and took a commanding position on the stage. He is not coldly classic, but dignified and deliberate. His acting and bearing upon the stage rise above the pall and gloom of the Tragic Muse. He is finished and yet earnest, and wonderfully natural, and throws around his acting an artistic refinement and a splendor of conception that disarms criticism and wins applause.

It is said by the best Shakespearean scholars in this country that his Hamlet is matchless; and there is no English speaking actor either in America or Europe, that excels him as Richelieu, the role he takes to-night. His representation of that interesting and historical character, Cardinal Richelieu, will be a feat of reason which the people of Janesville have not had the opportunity of enjoying for a long time.

The life of Lawrence Barrett and the success he has won, are of special interest to American youth. The fame he has acquired and the work he has accomplished, show what can be done by direct ambition, sobriety, and industry. Unlike Edwin Booth and Joseph Jefferson he did not spring from a race of actors. He began life in a humble way, and by solid, earnest work, remembering that, "in the lexicon of youth which fate reserves for bright manhood, there is no such word as fail," he rose to as proud a position on the stage as that occupied by any living tragedian.

AMONG THE MORMONS.

President Taylor Causes an Acceptable Welcome by the Salts.

SALT LAKE, Sept. 5.—President Hayes and party reached this city at half past two this afternoon, coming from Ogden by special train. The local quarrel over his reception had been settled by the municipal authorities referring after the president informed them that he would be the guest of Governor Murray. The committee of Mormons was very indignant, and also declared that they would not join in the crowd of welcome, but, last evening, John Taylor, president of the church, sat down on the stay-away proposition. He ordered the city Sunday schools arranged on the streets from the depot to the hotel, advised the people, through the church paper, to go and pay respect to the president, and, to-day, after the meeting for religious services in the tabernacle had assembled, the congregation was dismissed with the request that they swell the crowd to welcome Hayes. John Taylor and a dozen prominent Mormons went to Ogden and met the presidential train about two miles out on the Union Pacific. At Ogden Taylor's car was attached to the president's train, and when it started for this city, Hayes entered the Mormon car and rode half the way to Salt Lake in conversation with Taylor, Delegate Cannon and others. By telegraphic orders from Taylor, the schools and people in towns en route were at the depots with banners and bunting, and the president delivered three or four fine minute speeches. The conversation between the Mormons and the president did not touch upon religion or polygamy, being solely upon the country. At the depot an immense crowd cheered the visitors, and the streets leading to the hotel were thronged. President Hayes, Mrs. Hayes, and Governor Murray, were met by a large number of the Mormons, and the president, bowing pleasantly to the people as he passed along. At the hotel military bands serenaded the party, and the President, Secretary Ramsey, and General Sherman made pretty little speeches. Mrs. Hayes was also called to the balcony and was met by tremendous cheers. There were no telegrams this evening, but on Monday a lunch will be spread at Fort Douglas, and receptions will be held at the fort and in this city. General Sherman, who has been here before, and has many personal acquaintances among the Mormons, has been with them most of the afternoon, visiting the temple, residences, and offices of his old-time friend, Brigham Young. The Gentiles are jubilant over their success in capturing the president, but are a little sore because Hayes paid some attention to the Mormons, while the latter are annoyed that they have taken a back seat in the reception business, but console themselves over the fact that they had turned out the president would have been welcomed only by deserted streets.

WINCONSIN.
The Canvass in the Second District for the Congressional Nomination.
WATERLOO, Sept. 5.—The Second District Republican Congressional Convention meets at Madison Wednesday, the 8th inst. The basis of representation is one delegate for each Supervisor District, which makes the number of delegates some five fold greater than under the old regime of two delegates from each Assembly and Senatorial District. The Second District comprises the counties of Jefferson, Dane, Sauk, and Columbia. It is now generally conceded that the Hon. L. B. Caswell will be renominated, probably on the first formal ballot. Jefferson county sends a solid delegation favorable to his renomination, which is not alone to be regarded in the light of a simple home endorsement, but as a bona fide expression of confidence in the ability, zeal, fairness, and honesty he has displayed during his service in nearly three terms in Congress. Dane county will be substantially a unit for Mr. Caswell's renomination, which practically settles the matter in his favor. Jefferson and Dane together having a majority of the delegates. Mr. Caswell is promised a strong endorsement on the part of Columbia and Sauk, notwithstanding the Hon. Jonathan Bowman and the Hon. F. E. Woodman are candidates from these counties respectively. The members of the First, Third, and Seventh Congressional districts of Wisconsin have received the endorsement of the Republicans of a renomination; and the Republicans of the Eight district will soon follow suit by the renomination of the present member, the Hon. Thaddeus C. Pound. Certainly the present member from the Second district is no less deserving of this endorsement and confidence on his constituents; and it would neither be just nor wise policy to set him aside in the midst of his usefulness, especially at a juncture in the affairs of the Nation that requires the presence in the House of Representatives of our most influential and experienced legislators.

THE SENATORSHIP.

Senator Angus Cameron a Candidate for Re-election to the Senate.

LA CROSSE, Sept. 4.—It is an open secret here now that United States Senator Angus Cameron, whose residence is in this city, intends to become a candidate for re-election next winter, and that his friends are preparing for a vigorous campaign in his behalf. His election six years ago was the result of a fusion between eighteen Republican members of the Legislature who refused to support Matt H. Carpenter—the nominee of the Republican caucus—and the Democrats. Mr. Carpenter had fallen into disfavor with the Democrats to elect Cameron. At that time Mr. Cameron was himself supporting Mr. Carpenter, and gave no pledges to the Democrats inconsistent with his previous course as a sound and independent Republican. He had been a State Senator and a member of the Wisconsin Assembly, and was therefore known as a straight-forward member of that party. Just what the Democrats expected to gain by helping to elect Cameron to the United States Senate is a question without an answer in Wisconsin. To this day, but what they did gain is recorded in the Congressional Record whenever Cameron's name was called upon any political question before the Senate. He has been as stalwart as old Zach Chandler from start to finish, and he has never shown his Democratic supporters a single favor. Of course Mr. Cameron expects to submit his claims for a reelection entirely to the Republican caucus of the next Legislature, and his friends feel confident that his consistent record as a Republican during the six years he has served in the Senate, his high character as a man, and his comprehensive knowledge of public affairs will not be lost sight of when the next Legislature selects his successor.

THE SOLID SOUTH.

What It Means as Viewed by a Southerner.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 5.—The following are extracts from a letter read by one of the prominent clergymen of this city from a native of South Carolina, a Republican of high character:

"We are now upon the brink of political destruction, and a failure of the people of the North to vote solidly for Garfield will leave the Solid South master of the situation. The Republicans of the South cannot possibly give a single electoral vote for the Republican nominee from the fact that the Democrats have control of all the election machinery, and as heretofore we have voted out."

"I enclose an article entitled 'The Census,' clipped from a Southern journal, which shows that the South has gained in population nearly twice as fast as the North in the last decade. This, too, in face of the fact that we cannot induce them to settle here, while hundreds of thousands go annually to the North and West. You will doubtless remember my predictions in regard to the appointment of Democratic Superintendents of the Census for the South, and if the statement contained in this article be true, there can scarcely be a doubt that the returns have been doctored to show the Democratic politicians of the South are marshaling their hosts. The Confederate survivors are everywhere organized. Their old tattered flags are thrown to the breeze, and the veterans of the Lost Cause are again marching under their old banners, and we must not wonder that they are ready for any emergency expected to arise if there is any possibility to count Hancock in * * * Don't be afraid to speak of the glorious deeds of your gallant dead who fell in defense of the Union. Let their deeds be vindicated by every living comrade, and wage all to the cause they fought. Opponents will call each patriotic appeal 'waving the bloody shirt,' while at the same time they will flaunt their bloody rags of treason in the face of every loyal man in the South."

THE VERA CRUZ.

No Further Details of the Wreck of the Ill-Fated Ship.

NEW YORK, Sept. 5.—No news has been received to-day at the office of F. Alexander & Sons, the proprietors of the steamship line to which the city of Vera Cruz belonged. An inquiry by telegraph was received by them from some of the relatives in Boston of Charles Smith, the second assistant engineer of the lost vessel, and whether anything had been learned as to his fate. Charles Smith is reported saved. No information has been yet received by Postmaster James of this city, as to when the mail matter picked up along the Florida beach will be received here. The surviving passengers and crew are supposed to be en route for New York, but by what route they will come, or whether by water or rail, the agents of the steamship line have not been informed.

GONE BEFORE.

Death of Mrs. Sally B. Calkins, of Oconomowoc.

OCONOMOWOC, Wis., Sept. 5.—Mrs. Sally B. Calkins, a remarkable lady in many respects, died Friday night at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. J. C. Street, in this city. Mrs. Calkins was, at the time of her death, the oldest person in the county of Waukesha, perhaps the oldest in the State. She was born in October, 1785, in the town of Cornwallis, Nova Scotia, and was, therefore, nearly 95 years of age. In the year 1803 she was married to James Calkins, who died at Milwaukee in 1844. It was always a subject spoken of with pride by the deceased—as indeed it might be—that she had raised a family of eleven children, all of whom had arrived at the full estate of manhood and womanhood. Seven of these children survive her, and three were with her at the last moment. Of the surviving children are Mrs. Mary Rush, Mrs. Caroline Draper, Mrs. Lavinia Streeter, of this city; Mrs. Remington, of Grand Rapids, Mich.; Rev. Asael Calkins, of Mount Vernon, O.; J. C. Calkins, of Waukegan, Ill.; and Col. E. A. Calkins, editor of the Sunday Telegraph, Milwaukee, who is the youngest member of the large family.

GARFIELD CLUBS.

MANITOWOC, Wis., Sept. 5.—A Garfield Club was formed in the Fourth ward, this city, last evening, 105 strong. Clubs are forming in other wards, and in nearly every town in the county. The Republicans of this locality will make an aggressive campaign.

A Temperate Departure.

The following communication explains itself:

ALEXANDRIA, VA., N. Y., 1880.
Messrs. H. H. Warner & Co.
GENTLEMEN: I have been doctoring the last four years for rheumatism in the back, Sciatica and Kidney difficulties, and have been at no time free from pain until I commenced taking Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure which has entirely cured me. I want to keep it in the house to treat my friends with, instead of wines and liquors as it will cure the Diseases that they will produce.

Very truly yours,
CHARLES WALTON.

Democratic Curiosity Shop.

From Puck.

The Democratic party has a show, and Mr. Barnum is the showman—not old P. T. Barnum, but a smaller Democratic Barnum. He is showing General Hancock through the Old Curiosity Shop. It is quite a new experience for the General. He is a thorough Democrat, oh yes; he has been a Democrat from birth; but he hasn't had very much to do with his party since it was his disagreeable duty to defeat it at Gettysburg. In fact, he never did run very much with Democrats. He is a solid and a good one, and it has been his duty to defend the nation, and, naturally, this has brought him in company of Republicans, who are rather more in that line. So, you see, he is quite a stranger in his own house. The show contains many things that are new to him. This may account for his looking a little pale and awkward.

"Just right up, General," says Mr. Barnum, smiling blandly: "Guess your astonishment to find what an A. 1, first-class Old Curiosity Shop we've got here. Didn't know your noble heritage as a born Democrat, did you? Now, here, by these highly interesting antiquities, you may see the rise of the Democratic party. It's a pretty high; but that ain't nothing to the rise its going to get. No, I don't mean it's going up. Never mind, cast your superb eye over this here. This is the whipping post, the famous patriarchal institution of the South; and there are the shackles and the whips—the trimmings so to speak—of the nation, and hear the howl of the nigger—don't it seem like-like? Ah, General, that there post was the pillar of the party."

Oh! them dear old days is gone, long gone; but maybe we'll have 'em back again, if the South stays solid. You're a northern man, General, do you remember how those chivalrous Southerners used to call us 'Northern Mudsills,' in their playful way? Summer was a Northern Mudsill—there's the club that Prest Brooks laid him out with—chivalrous of Brooks, wasn't it?

Now, here's where we get to the War—the unbloody war that was waged against the divine ordinance of slavery. You did some of the waging, General; but you won't think no harder of you, if you're solid with the South now. Here's the First Shot of Freedom—white freedom—freedom, white. I needn't say, it was fired from the Southern States, and fired from the bay in blockade times. We ain't got many Yankee battle-flags to show, but that's partly your fault, General. There—just see that—don't your heart beat faster at sight of that? It's the pistol that the Martyr Booth shot the tyrant Lincoln with. Chivalrous Booth, wasn't it? We might have some of Lincoln's bullets, that oozed out of the wound; but that kind of thing ain't much in our line. Since the war, our stock ain't so complete and rich in relics—we ain't had the chance. But you may like to glance at a few Republican battle-flags—we've got a neat collection of them—and here's our greatest triumph of late years—the Real Original Rag Baby. There ain't no hard money nonsense about you, General, is there?

And here is, General Hancock, your new Mount. None of yer old Union War-horses—this is the Genuine Democratic Charger—just wants your superb head to make it a complete animal. And then Mr. Barnum stops, and waits for the enthusiasm. General Hancock yips his forehead, turns his fascinated eyes from the Whipping Post, and the Shackles, and cries: "Great Scott, am I to be the Head of that?"

Mr. Barnum flatters himself with the hope that the "good old days" he laments may come again. They may; but the chances are diminishing. The Boys in Blue are once more in line. They have had their little snail, all by themselves; their scilich schism nearly broke up the party, and aided in forcing upon it rather an unsatisfactory candidate. But the snail have come to their senses, they are back in the ranks, like good little boys, and everybody knows that means business.
